

Abstract of the Disclosure

A wound clamp having two substantially identical halves. The clamp halves are hinged and biased together using a spring. Prongs or needles integrally formed with the halves cause the clamp to be engaged firmly on the conjunctival and scleral tissue about the wound. The biasing of the clamp halves toward each other provide for a tight sealing of the wound.